

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF NEBRASKA

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Plaintiff,

vs.

TIMOTHY ALAN MOORE,

Defendant.

4:22-CR-3102

ORDER

This matter is before the Court on the defendant's motion to extend the limitation period for filing a motion pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2255 (filing 116). The Court will deny that motion, without prejudice, because it is premature.

A § 2255 motion must generally be filed within 1 year from "the date on which the judgment of conviction becomes final." § 2255\(f\)\(1\). The Court entered its judgment of conviction (filing 107) on August 24, 2023, and the 14-day period for taking an appeal ran (without an appeal) on September 7. Fed. R. App. P. 4\(b\)\(1\)\(A\)\(i\). Thus, the defendant's conviction became final the next day, and the 1-year limitation period from the judgment of conviction will expire on Monday, September 9, 2024. See United States v. Martin, 408 F.3d 1089, 1090 (8th Cir. 2005); Fed. R. Civ. P. 6\(a\)\(1\)\(C\).

But that is not the only way in which the 1-year period of limitation can be calculated. The limitation period runs from the latest of

- (1) the date on which the judgment of conviction becomes final;
- (2) the date on which the impediment to making a motion created by governmental action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States is removed, if the movant was prevented from making a motion by such governmental action;

- (3) the date on which the right asserted was initially recognized by the Supreme Court, if that right has been newly recognized by the Supreme Court and made retroactively applicable to cases on collateral review; or
- (4) the date on which the facts supporting the claim or claims presented could have been discovered through the exercise of due diligence.

§ 2255(f) (emphasis in original). So, if the defendant's § 2255 motion were to be impeded by an unconstitutional or unlawful government action, or based on a newly-recognized constitutional right, or supported by facts that could not have been discovered until after the judgment of conviction became final, then it is possible that the motion might be timely even if filed after September 9, 2024. But the Court cannot make that determination without knowing the basis of the defendant's § 2255 motion.

Furthermore, when extraordinary circumstances beyond a petitioner's control prevent a timely filing, equitable tolling of the 1-year limitation period may be appropriate. Byers v. United States, 561 F.3d 832, 835-37 (8th Cir. 2009); E.J.R.E. v. United States, 453 F.3d 1094, 1098 (8th Cir. 2006). But that is "an exceedingly narrow window of relief" and requires proof that the petitioner has been pursuing his rights diligently and some extraordinary circumstances stood in his way. Deroo v. United States, 709 F.3d 1242, 1246 (8th Cir. 2013). The defendant explains that he only "recently discovered" the basis for his motion, and that his access to a law library and other resources has been limited, preventing him from completing his motion. Filing 116. Such circumstances might be found to warrant equitable tolling. See Soloman v. United States, 467 F.3d 928, 933-35 (6th Cir. 2006). On the other hand, they might not. See United States v. Cooper, 891 F. Supp. 2d 1071, 1075-76 (D. Neb.

2012); Mathison v. United States, 648 F. Supp. 2d 106, 112 (D.D.C. 2009); cf. Anjulo-Lopez, 541 F.3d at 817-18. And again, until the defendant's hypothetical motion is actually filed, the Court can't determine whether it was diligently pursued. See Deroo, 709 F.3d at 1246.

To summarize: the "safe harbor" for the defendant's § 2255 motion is September 9, 2024. As explained above, a motion filed after that date might nonetheless still be timely (and the Court emphasizes might). But the Court cannot make that determination in advance based on incomplete facts. So, the Court must deny the defendant's premature request for an extension of the 1-year period of limitation. But the Court will do so without prejudice: if the defendant files a § 2255 motion after September 9, he can argue at that time why the Court should extend the 1-year period of limitation.

IT IS ORDERED that the defendant's motion to extend (filing 116) is denied.

Dated this 5th day of September, 2024.

Senior United States District Judge
